ANNUAL CIRCULAR

OF THE

MEDICAL DEPARTMENT.

The Lectures for the Session of 1848-'49 will commence in this Institution on the third Monday in November, and continue four months. This late period in autumn is not only the most convenient for all the objects of medical instruction, but likewise inspires more confidence among strangers to the climate—being several weeks beyond the duration of our occasional epidemics, and when the mass of the unacclimated return to the city. The catalogue will demonstrate that, notwithstanding the extraordinary reports in relation to the unhealthy state of New Orleans at that time, the number and respectability of the class was very flattering. We append, likewise, a list of Graduates, the most numerous ever published by this School.

Having adopted and maintained for a series of years a high standard of medical education—a course certainly unfavorable to the collection of numerous classes—the Faculty rejoice in discovering that they have been well sustained by their fellow citizens, and by the majority of educated and intelligent Southern Physicians.

The continued liberality of the State Legislature has provided an ample appropriation for the completion of the new College edifice, which is again in the hands of the contractors for that purpose. In situation, dimensions, architecture and internal arrangements, this structure will compare favorably with any building in this country, devoted to similar objects. One great advantage is its convenient proximity to the Charity Hospital, where also a magnificent amphitheatre for lectures and operations has been lately erected. The extensive basement rooms in the College building will be immediately finished for a restaurant or eating house, where gentlemen will be provided with good fare on more moderate terms than they have generally found in the city boarding houses.

The Professor of Anatomy lectures five times a week, upon general, special and surgical anatomy; for the illustration of which, besides a large supply of subjects, he is furnished with plates, models and preparations of the greatest excellence.

The department of Practical Anatomy is entirely under his control, in which the facilities for prosecuting the study of this branch are unrivalled, as any number of subjects for dissection or the practice of operative surgery are furnished free of charge. To assist him in this department the Professor has appointed an able Demonstrator.

The Professor of Physiology and Pathology lectures four times a week on the functions of digestion, respiration and circulation in man, and on the general principles of Physiology and Pathology.

The Professor of the Theory and Practice of Medicine lectures every day in the week. This course is devoted exclusively to the history, causes, pathology, symptoms and treatment of diseases. These, the teacher being likewise professor of Clinical Medicine, has the most ample opportunities for illustrating at the bedside of the patient in the wards and amphitheatre of the Charity Hospital, and also when necessary in the dead-house attached to that institution.

The Professor of Surgery also lectures every day during the course, on the principles and practice of Surgery, and on Surgical Anatomy and Operative Surgery. In practical surgery, as in medicine, the advantages of this school are preëminent. We are satisfied, from the best authority and personal observation, that the Professors of no school in America are connected with and enjoy the unlimited use of an institution, in which there are so many interesting cases requiring surgical and medical aid, and the use of the knife, as are to be found in the wards of the New Orleans Charity Hospital. This great receptacle for thousands of the afflicted of every climate, supported bountifully by the contributions of a State, where there are no paupers but strangers, and attended gratuitously by the members of a profession, who are the high priests of philanthropy throughout the civilized world, is opened wide to every aspirant who seeks knowledge among its tenants. Two hours are allotted every morning, from 8 to 10, for following the Professors and other Physicians around the wards. On Wednesday and Saturday the Professors of Clinical Medicine and Surgery give regular lectures in the wards or amphitheatre.

The Professor of Obstetrics and of the diseases of women and children, lectures four times a week on the the principles and practice of Midwifery, on the treatment of women in childbed, on the diseases peculiar to the female sex, and on the management and diseases of new-born infants. Having the control of the female wards in the Hospital, and an ample supply of colored models, plates and instruments for the full illustration of this course; he has also an opportunity of providing cases of labor for the senior members of his class, in sufficient number to give them knowledge and confidence in the practice of this important department of medicine.

The Professor of Materia Medica and Therapeutics devotes four lectures a week to the general principles of Therapeutics, Toxicology and Hygiene, and to the Natural History, chemical and medical properties, preparation, and mode of administering the various articles of the Materia Medica. He is provided with an excellent and rare collection of specimens, and every other facility for the illustration of his course.

The Professor of Chemistry lectures four times a week. He has a lecture room capable of containing 700 people, devoted exclusively to his course—extensive laboratories, a fine chemical and philosophical apparatus, a large collection of chemicals and minerals, and, in fine, every thing that is necessary for a full experimental and demonstrative course of chemical lectures.

The requisites for graduation are those obtaining among the highest schools in the country—viz: three years' study and attendance on two full courses of lectures, of which the last must be in this school. Dissections and hospital attendance will not be dispensed with. The candidate, who must be over 21 years of age, is required to deposit a well written Medical Thesis, and the diploma fee, with the Dean, one month before the close of the Session.
